"Mother" Mandelbaum bobs up serenely again before the New York public after an ace of nearly four years from the scenes of her youth and the celebrated "fence" she kept for twenty years at Rivington and Norfolk streets.

Yesterday her son Julius, a young man of swenty-six years, who is under indictment for being an accessory of his mother in receiving stolen property from shoplifters and other thieves, suddenly appeared before Judge Martine to renew the bail which he had jumped in 1884 when his mother fied to Judge Martine to renew the ball which he had jumped in 1884 when his mother fied to Canada.

Judge Martine refused to entertain the matter, at all, on the ground that he had seted spon the case when District-Attorney, and Lawyer Moss, representing Howe & Hummel, counsel for Mrs. Mandelbaum, thereupon took their innocent client before Judge Andrews.

It appears that all the necessary pipe was laid for Julius's return about two months ago, and on that understanding the bail was renewed, the bond of $5,000 being signed by Fanny Bloch, of 209 East One Hundred and Second street, and Morris Isaacs, of 230 Suffolk street.

It is believed that this step is preliminary to a move to get Mother Mandelbaum here and secure her release. She is living in the very quiet little city of Hamilton, Ont., about forty-four miles west of Niagara Falls, but does not seem to enjoy the loveliness of Burlington Bay and the frog marshes of Dundas.

She longs for the scenes of her childhood.

She longs for the scenes of her childhood in Rivington street, and, believing in the clever skill of her counsel, thinks she would rather take her chances of going to Sing Sing or Clinton than living in exile in a foreign

It will be remembered that Detective Frank, of the Pinkerton Detective Agency, did a clever piece of work in ferreting out the "fence" work of Mother Mande baum and her son and Herman Stoud, who was chief clerk for the "fence."

Frank bought some of the stolen goods taken by shoplifters from Simpson. Crawford & Simpson's, Le Boutillier Brothers, Hearn's, Stern Brother's and other drygoods bouses. These goods bore a private mark by which they were easily identified.

They will be placed in evidence against Julius Mandelbaum when his case comes up for trial, which will not be before the fall term, according to information received from the District-Attorney's office.

An Evening World of the virtuous young man with an income of $60,000 a year, full of indignation at the baseness of Full Long. Then he added vigorously: "Of course I appeal. I never will pay it."

Ful Long was made to understand that he had won the suit, and his dried and withered old face assumed a ghastly gr'in exceedingly like that of a Bowery munmy. His starred eyes watered, and then, finding that the plump and hearty Chu Fong was looking at him, his chops fell again and he looked like a smoked death's head again.

NOT IN HIS SENSES.

old, and to-day he lies sweltering off his wrath in his room on the top floor of 236 Fifth avenue. Fifth avenue.

He is very angry because he can't locate his wife and because he thinks a newspaper has done him an injustice.

"Yes, my wife has gene, and, what is more, she has been gone since last April," he said.

"Eloped, or abducted?" asked the re-

"Eloped, or abducted?" asked the reporter.

"Neither. She just went away, and now I can't find her. A paper refused a personal of mine, and I tell you I am going to know the reason why," he declared, vehemently.

"I want the Philadelphia papers to copy my advertisement," he continued.

"Why Philadelphia papers?"

"Because my wife has relatives there."

"Oh, she is with her relatives then?"

"Yes. I don't fear for her safety or care, but I want to know where she has gone to. I am going to Europe in a short time."

Mr. Ewing rents his room from Mrs. Lasson, who leases the top story of the building.

Mrs. Lasson was about to tell the reporter more about the case when Mr. Ewing ap-

The "Good-day" of the reporter was answered by a sentence in which William Henry consigned the newspaper man to a much hotter place than the noonday Bowery.

Every European nation except Spain and Portugat was represented among the 4.000 immigrants who arrived at Castle Garden one day last week, and a band of Hindoos was thrown in.

It is not an easy job effect an entrance to the Garden. First, one must go through the civil-service examination of Gatekeepers Andy White and James Collins.

If the visitor passes, he goes through the court-yard to the main building. Another gateman hails him and he is passed on to still the big garden was literally covered with immigrants. It was about noontime, and many were indulging in their midday meal. This consisted of a big hunk of dark-colored bread, eight inches of sausage and a bottle

The attitudes of the immigrants were pic-The attitudes of the immigrants were picturesque. In one corner was a group of Germans, talking loudly in their native tongue between bites. Nearby were half a dozen dark skinned Italians. They had finished their repast, and one of them, a boy of seventeen years, was scraping out some preity melodies on an old violin. A little further on were some Irishmen and their families talking to the good Father Kelley, successor to Father Riordan at the Garden. Immigrants have to go through considerable red tape before they are free persons in a free country. a free country. When the incoming steamship is anchored alongside her wharf, they take one of the side-wheel steamers, the Rosa, John E. Moore or George Starr, and are transferred with their baggage to Castle Garden, where the Custom-House officers, healed by Chief I nspector Matt Walker, search their baggage to see that Uncle Sam is not cheated. The immigrants are then put into the fenced-off pen at the west end of the building and brought up in line to the clerks in the centic inclosure.

A word about these clerks. Chief among them and well liked is Daniel Banduzer, who speaks several languages. Angelo Gallo speaks Italian, French and Spanish; Sven Smith struggles with the Swedish tongue; Major Charles Simpson tackles Russian, Hungarian and all the Polish and Slavic languages; Christian Raven lets the Danes look at his red whiskers while he talks to them in the r native tongue; Moritz Silverstein abuses the German tongue and Malcom Douglas speaks Italian and French fluently, Ernest Lecocg is the agent of the French Fro st Lecoeg is the agent of the French Society, Adolph Von Neib Ischutz represents the German Society and Phil Fitzsimmons stands on guard for the Irish Society. Those who do not pass muster are usbered into the enclosure. In this enclosure the sick, the penniless, the eged, the children and all detained emigra ts are kept. When the clerk has called out the names the boarding-house runners are let loose on them.

These boarding-house runners are hard-looking citizens, ind the way they pull in the simple-minded immigrants is a caution.

These preliminaries over, the immigrants are allowed to leave the garden and either seek work here or make their way out West.

There is a police force in the Garden under the eyes of Roundsman Tommy Hiland; and over in the northwest and southwest ends of the building are lunch and beer counters.

To give an idea of the great incoming tide of immigrants, an average month may be cited. Last April 59,077 immigrants arrived from nearly every country of the Eastern liemisphere. About 68 per cent of them went West direct; 22 per cent, gave New York as their destination and 10 per cent, went East and South.
